

Cuban Troubles Traced Back to Pres. Coolidge, Kellogg, S. Z. Mitchell

WASHINGTON — Discretion and loyalty are the cardinal virtues of all career diplomats, but over the third highball they will admit that the present chaos in Cuba to a very considerable extent dates back to three potent people.

They are Calvin Coolidge, Frank B. Kellogg, and Sidney Z. Mitchell, head of Electric Bond and Share. The latter was materially responsible for elevating Machado to office. The first two were materially responsible for keeping him there.

It happened this way: Machado was hired by Electric Bond and Share to buy power companies all over Cuba. He was then only a member of Congress. He made money, was boosted by Mitchell, ran for the presidency. After election he pushed a bill through the Cuban Congress giving Electric Bond and Share favorable leases on the Havana electric light plant and street car system and remitting back taxes.

Then in 1928, Coolidge and Kellogg went to Havana. They were received as conquering heroes. Cuba was the only foreign country visited by Mr. Coolidge. It was considered a great tribute to Machado. The people of Cuba considered him invincible.

That visit insured Machado's re-election two years later. Since the Coolidge trip Cubans were led until recently to believe that the United States would intervene to support their dictator if they revolted.

Inflation

The long-argued issue, to inflate or not to inflate, is once more wringing the brows of F. D. R.'s inner council of economic strategists.

Prior to the recent market break, the question had been relegated into the background. The President and his advisers were content to let things ride. Stock and commodity prices were zooming skyward. The world had a very rosy hue.

But the market flop and subsequent flattening out of price gains completely changed this picture. So inflationists again are raising their voices. "I told you so," Oklahoma's Senator Elmer Thomas, zealous leader of the band, has renewed his demand that the President put the three-point Inflation Act into operation.

As a result the Administration is taking an inventory of the situation. Under the Thomas Inflation measure, the President is empowered to expand Federal Reserve credit by $3,000,000,000 in five years by an equal sum, and cut the gold content up to 50 per cent.

Merry-Go-Round

A private check by the Treasury submitted to F. D. R. shows that practically nothing has been done of an inflationary nature. The gold content of the dollar remains untouched; expansion of Federal Reserve credit in the form of open market purchases of government bonds amounts to a meager $199,000,000; and expansion of the currency comes to only $130,000,000. A confidential report disclosed that the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., has not issued a dollar of currency under the inflationary measure.

Obliging

Few business groups have come in for more vitriolic private denunciation by the higher-ups around Roosevelt than the sugar crowd. "I never knew people could be as insatiable in their greed until I met the sugar refiners," one high agricultural official said.

The American Sugar Refinery made enough money during the depression to pay $5 and $6 dividends and retire several million dollars worth of bonds. Savannah Refinery made $8 a share and

HERRERA ESCAPES

Assassins Fire Shots at New President

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—President Roosevelt intends to keep the three American warships in Cuban waters until there is reasonable assurance that there will be no outbreak of anarchy in the island Republic, it was said at the state department today.

It is hoped such assurance will be forthcoming in time for the vessels to withdraw late today, but if Ambassador Sumner Welles considers the situation still dangerous the ships will remain indefinitely.

HAVANA, Aug. 14.—Two American warships, dispatched by President Roosevelt to ensure the safety of American citizens in Cuba, arrived off Havana shortly before dawn today.

Just as the American men-of-war steamed into the harbor at dawn, one of the last traces of the deposed Machado regime disappeared with the precipitate flight of General Alberto Herrera, Machado's minister of war and military dictator for a day.

Herrera fled with members of his family to escape the tidal wave of retribution meted out by liberated Cuba against pillars of the Machado regime, believed to have taken a toll of nearly 50 dead and property damage that ran into the millions.

"PROTECT, NOT INTERVENE"—Under specific orders from President Roosevelt to protect and not intervene, the destroyer Taylor anchored in the middle of Havana harbor while the Claxton took up a post off Morro Castle. A third warship was expected at Manzanillo from the Caribbean sea.

Both American and Cuban business men and authorities were hopeful that the presence of the warships off the coast would have a telling moral effect in restoring peace to this strife-torn island and put an end to the "war of revenge" launched by the populace against remaining symbols of Machado's despotism.

The victims for the most part have been leaders and members of Machado's dreaded secret strong-arm squad, the "porra," while the property sacked and looted has included the presidential palace, government offices and the homes of members of the deposed president's cabinet.

ASSASSINS ABROAD—Despite the general jubilation at Carlos Manuel de Cespedes' succession to the presidency, an attempt was made to assassinate him four hours after he took the oath of office.

An automobile filled with men believed to have been Machado supporters, striving to effect a last, desperate revenge for the reverse suffered by their chief, sped past the home of the new president, spraying it with machine gun bullets.

No one in the house was hit, but two soldiers were reported wounded by a volley of lead as the gunmen escaped.

2 Negro Youths To Die In Chair

Plea of Mistaken Identity Ignored by Governor in Refusing to Act

COLUMBUS, Aug. 14.—Two negro youths, convicted of the murder of Harry Friedman, Silverton bank cashier, today lived their last hours of life.

Shortly after sun-down tonight, the two youths, James and Joseph Murphy, will be put to death in the electric chair at Ohio Penitentiary.

The fate of the negroes were sealed last Saturday when Governor George White refused to intervene, even though a white woman, Mrs. Mildred Bonnie of Cincinnati, appeared before the state parole board and declared the pair were victims of mistaken identity.

Mob Slays Two Negroes, Other Thot Dead Hunted; Confessed Girl's Death

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Aug. 14.—A special grand jury investigation into the lynching of two negro youths, charged with the assault and murder of 18-year-old Vaudine Maddox, was ordered today by Governor B. M. Miller as searchers combed the countryside for the body of a third negro, seized by an armed mob with his two slain companions.

Little hope was held that the third negro, Elmore Clark, 28, confessed slayer of the mob, had escaped the fury of the mob.

Clark and his two companions, Dan Pippin, 18, and A. T. Dardin, 16, were seized by the heavily armed mob early Sunday as they were being spirited to jail in Birmingham for safe keeping.

Two automobiles loaded with the mobsters surrounded the sheriff's car just across the Jefferson-co line 20 miles from here and forcibly took the indicted negroes from the officers. Outnumbered, the deputies offered no resistance.

A few hours later, the bodies of Pippin and Hardin, each riddled with 25 pistol bullets, were found on a roadside near Woodstock, midway between Tuscaloosa and Birmingham and only a short distance from the point where they were seized.

Clark, whose confession that he

The youth was walking on a side-walk near the north corporation of Grove City about 4 a. m. when the crash was heard in a restaurant from which he had walked only a few minutes before. The automobile which struck him was driven off the main highway and tore up a part of the curbing where it hit the youth.

MRS. MILLER SISTER

The youth was a native of this city and besides his father is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Russell Miller, 375 E. Franklin-st. and Miss Mary Louise of Columbus. He had been residing with his grandmother, Mrs. Barbara Pierce, 476 S. Fifth-st., Columbus, since his mother passed away 13 years ago.

He had graduated from Central high school, Columbus, last June. How he happened to be in Grove City is a mystery to his family. He had been at a party with a number of school friends Saturday night. His body was identified in the Doty & Stroup funeral home at Grove City four hours after his death by a friend, Miss Helen McCauley, Columbus.

The hit-skip car dragged young Miller's body 100 feet. His skull was fractured, he suffered internal injuries and both his legs were broken.

LENSE ONLY CLUE

A piece of broken head-light lense is the only clue to the car which caused his death.

Burial will be in Hitler-Ludwig cemetery.

Deputy Sheriffs Bryan Custer and Miller Fissell were called to Darbyville, early Monday, to settle a dispute over custody of the body of E. J. Mullock who passed away in that village.

Action of the officers was not necessary, however. It seems that a son of the deceased called a Mt. Sterling funeral director and a neighbor summoned a Kingston director. The body was finally turned over to the Mt. Sterling man.

COUNTY 'DADS' DELAY NAMING COURTS' CLERK

Commissioners Await Report of Atwill Checking Out Pickens

HEAR NEW NAMES

J. O. Eagleson Newest Candidate for Post

Selection of a successor to Ferd M. Pickens, clerk of courts, will not be made by the county commissioners until the present clerk has been 'checked out' by Allen 'Jack' Atwill of the state auditor's office. Mr. Atwill will probably not complete his work until about Tuesday noon. He was called Monday morning by Mr. Pickens.

As a result, Mr. Pickens presented his resignation to the county commissioners to become effective Tuesday instead of Monday as at first intended. Pickens has resigned to become chief counsel for the Columbus branch of the federal Homeowners Loan corporation.

EAGLESON CANDIDATE

Several new names had been added today to the list of applicants for the appointment. J. O. Eagleson, S. Pickaway-st., former superintendent of city schools, is a candidate and it is reported O. Miller Beckett, Scioto-twp Democrat is seeking the appointment.

Harry W. Moore, former county treasurer, announced Monday that he is not a candidate for the office and so did Jack Roebuck, N. Court-st., whose name was mentioned Saturday.

The commissioners early this afternoon had not opened Mr. Pickens' formal resignation and neither had they opened any of the applications. A number of verbal applications had been received, it was said.

TASK IS DIFFICULT

The county dads face a real task, no one will deny, before they have reached their decision. They will act entirely independent of the county Democratic organizations unless they ask for assistance in making their selection. All three, John W. Hay, Burr H. Rader and Ralph E. May, were kept busy over the entire week-end by office-seekers.

The way the matter stands now the only thing certain is that the successor to Mr. Pickens is sure to be a Democrat.

The commissioners have not determined whether they will act Tuesday or wait until next Monday at their regular meeting. A

SCOTT FACING BOOZE CHARGE

Raid Nets Gallon of Alleged Whiskey; Hearing Before Judge Adkins

Roland "Scotty" Scott, Western-ave and Water-st., was awaiting a hearing before Judge J. W. Adkins Monday for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, following a surprise raid on his home Saturday evening by members of the police and sheriff's departments.

He was to be arraigned sometime Monday afternoon.

Scott was arrested at his home at Water-st and Western-ave about 8 p. m. by Sheriff Bryan Custer, Deputy Sheriff Bryan Custer, Officer Fred Fitzpatrick and Karl Radcliffe. A gallon of alleged whiskey was found at his home.

He was arrested sometime ago on a similar charge and was fined $100 the last time.

Scott is the third liquor law offender to be arrested within the past two weeks. Frank Smith of Logan-st is in the county jail serving out a fine of $100 and costs imposed by Judge J. W. Adkins, and Sherman Lowery of Clinton-st was released last week after friends furnished bond and he made arrangements to pay his $100 fine in installments.

Despite the fact that the federal prohibition bureau passed out of existence last week, the local enforcement agencies continue to remain active.

New Trouble Feared in Effort to Bring Industry Under NRA.

MAY USE PRESSURE

Coming Week Important One for Country

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—President Roosevelt today faced the necessity of personal intervention as new and serious labor troubles threatened the drive of the National Recovery Administration to bring all industry under the Blue Eagle by Sept. 1.

The president was expected to receive a survey of the labor situation during the day, having already been personally informed of the serious difficulties met in bringing the oil, steel and coal industries under the NRA.

Serious strike threats were renewed in the western Pennsylvania soft coal field, where President Roosevelt first intervened to bring industrial peace. Several thousand miners had quit work as a result of disputes over keeping the peace pact.

President Roosevelt—determined to go the limit to make the recovery administration a success—awaited further developments before deciding upon more drastic pressure than that of public sentiment.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—With 7,500,000 to 10,000,000 workers estimated, unofficially, to have enlisted under the Blue Eagle, National Recovery Administration officials today launched into a week of critical importance to the entire movement.

Modifications of presidential blanket codes were being approved as rapidly as National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson and his staff could wade through the mass of correspondence piled high on their desks.

While Johnson himself insisted he was not seeking figures, some of his aides expressed belief that ten million workers were in the fold. The goal, however, is still far off with the September deadline approaching.

Beginning with a half million people in the textile industries, the recovery administration counted 750,000 bank employees, upwards of 2,000,000 in utilities, the canning and construction industries, and millions in more retail and miscellaneous industries.

PRESIDENT ON HAND

With President Roosevelt back in Washington to confer on the progress of the program, Johnson nevertheless faced difficult problems this week.

Representatives of the steel industry are scheduled to confer with him Tuesday, with the labor fight still unsettled; oil producers are to be called two days later, and final conferences were expected on lumber, publishing and other industries.

The coal hearings have ended with operators and miners far apart and Alabama operators threatening the first court fight against the NRA, a conference on coal was slated for Aug. 22.

The hearing on the proposed automobile code this week is expected to bring the recovery act

Birds Take Two; Heath In Stride

With Mickey Heath breaking out of his slump to feature both games of the double bill, the Columbus Red Birds completed their home stay Sunday by grabbing both games from St. Paul in the series finale. The scores were 6-2 and 2-1, the latter game going 12 innings before Manager Ray Blades scored Benny Borgman with the winning run.

Heath's triple in the eighth inning with the paths loaded was the bit blow in a game which saw Bud Teachout win his fifteenth victory of the year with Slim Harris as the victim. Heath drove in another run.

In the second game was nip and tuck with sensational fielding halting all scoring attempts. Borgman doubled after two were out in the Columbus half of the twelfth and Manager Emmett McCann ordered Lew Riggs purposefully passed. That brought Blades to the plate and he smacked the first ball pitched for a single winning the game.

It was Paul Dean's eighteenth victory of the year against six defeats. He fanned nine men. Newkirk was the losing pitcher granting 11 hits against eight from Dean's offerings. Heath hit safely three times in the nightcap.

Indianapolis took third place in the loop defeating Kansas City twice, 5 to 11 and 6 to 6, Turner and Boler doing the twirling.

"Unser Joe" Hauser broke Nick Cullop's home run record at Toledo smacking his fifty-fifth home run of the year as the teams split a double bill. The Millers won the first game, 3-0, and lost the second 12-10. Dutch Holland hit safely six times in the second game to tie a record.

Milwaukee nosed out Louisville twice, 5-4 and 4-3.

RAIN STOPS 'REC' TILTS

Circleville Oils Lead 1-0 at End of First Inning When Downpour Comes

Rain playing havoc with Sunday afternoon's recreation ball games, activity is to be resumed this evening when the 'Fat' men led by Bill Pickens play the 'Skinny' men, the leader not yet named.

The game is carded for 6:15 p. m.

The Sinclair Oil-Circleville Oil game scheduled for Sunday afternoon the final ray of the first half, will be played Tuesday beginning at 6:15.

The game may have quite a bearing on the league. The Sinclair are right back of the Walisa Sluggers and if they win will be tied for first place. If they lose the Walisa's win the first half title.

The Circleville Oils started out with one run in the first inning. Merriman, the lead-off man, reaching second when Vlerbome knocked down his smash then threw high to first. He took third when Purcell grounded out Weller to Kline and scored on Jack Heeter's single to center.

The Sinclairs were taken out one two, three in the first half of the inning.

Before the Circleville Oils could go on the field for the second inning the downpour came.

Purcell and Vlerbome were the opposing pitchers.

Other games scheduled for this week will be moved back one day.

SARAZEN WINS TITLE OF P. G. A.

Easily Defeats Willie Goggins in Milwaukee Meet; Not in Canadian

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 14.—Gene Sarazen, former United States and British Open champion, turned to the Canadian open today for a new conquest after capturing the 1933 Professional Golfers' Association championship.

Sarazen will be on hand for the Canadian event when play begins at Toronto Thursday.

The stocky Miami veteran won the P. G. A. title for the third time since 1922 yesterday when he defeated Willie Goggins of Selma Beach, Cal., 5 and 4, in the final match at Blue Mound country club.

Besides possession of the traveling trophy surrendered by Olin Dutra of Los Angeles, 1932 champion, Sarazen received a $1,000 check as first place money.

Goggins experienced trouble with his putter throughout the final match yesterday while Sarazen, cool and unperturbed shot his best golf of the week, taking 111 strokes for the 32 holes, or four under par figures.

At the end of the first eighteen holes Sarazen was leading one up, an advantage which he extended to four up at the twenty-seventh green.

It is with deep regret that I am compelled to bother you at this time with an appointment of Clerk of Courts of Pickaway-co, to fill my unexpired term.

I've Often Wondered

By PAT J. KIRWIN

HOW Messrs. Correll and Gosden chose the character names, "Amos 'n' Andy" for their famous radio skit?

The boys informed me the other day that there was no particular significance to these names—they were merely selected as being typical of southern negro names. They said further that when they first developed this type of program they were broadcasting on Station WGN, Chicago. The original names of the characters were "Sam 'n' Henry." When they left Station WGN to go with Station WMAQ, it was necessary for them to select new names as the names "Sam 'n' Henry" were restricted to Station WGN. And "Amos 'n' Andy" were selected as the names of typical Georgia negroes.

Incidentally, I also asked an official of the Pepsi-Cola Co. to tell me who was responsible for naming the product that not only is sold in the United States but also in the following explanation:

"There is no record available as to just who was the individual who suggested the name, Pepsi-Cola. It was one of those propositions that was worked out by the people who were interested in the company at that time and developed from a list of names submitted by people present."

F. D. R. Explains Why He Sent 3 Ships To Cuba

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—President Roosevelt formally explained his action in ordering three American warships to Cuba, carefully pointing out that it did not constitute American intervention in the affairs of the island republic.

His announcement, setting forth the purposes of the action and extending every good wish to the Cuban people, follows:

"Latest advances are to the effect that domestic disturbances, including acts of violence, are occurring in some parts of Cuba among certain elements of the population.

"In these circumstances, I feel constrained as a matter of special precaution and solely for the purpose of safeguarding and protecting the lives and persons of American citizens in Cuba, to order certain vessels to points on the Cuban coast.

NOT TO INTERVENE

"The change of government now taking place in Cuba is in entire accord with the recognized constitution and laws of that country, and no possible question of intervention or of the slightest interference with the internal affairs of Cuba has arisen or is intended by this precautionary step to protect, if necessary, the lives of American citizens, pending the restoration of normal conditions of law and order by the Cuban authorities.

"I am giving strict instructions accordingly to the commanders of each vessel.

"The American people deeply sympathize with the people of Cuba in their economic distress, and are praying that quiet and strict order may soon prevail in every part of Cuba. The American government will lend all aid feasible, through constituted Cuban authorities, for the relief of the distressed people of the island."

CAIN WALKS AWAY

Police were on the look-out, Monday, for Eugene Cain, of Chillicothe, who walked away from the mayor's office pending hearing on a charge of assault and battery.

Cain was arrested on complaint of John Phillips, W. Main-st restaurant man, that he struck his daughter. While Police Chief W. H. Warner was across the street buying Cain's supper the man asked James Shaw, in charge of the Mayor's office, if he could get a drink.

He walked away and hasn't been seen since.

PEDESTRIAN HIT

Joseph J. Kirwin, 811 S. Scioto-st., escaped with a minor injury Saturday evening when he was struck by a motorist at the S. Court-st railroad crossing.

ministration to grips with the problem of bringing all major industries into the fold. Officials, however, were hopeful the automobile hearings would prove harmonious.

Complaints of "chiseling" also demanded action from the administration. Protesters that textile manufacturers in the south are not observing the spirit of the first code adopted for a major industry were particularly disturbing. The purpose of the act of spreading employment and raising wages is being defeated by some employers, it is charged.

MAY SHOW POWER

As these complaints continue to roll in, it appeared possible the recovery administration might finally show the hand of force instead of relying entirely upon public sentiment. Johnson himself gave a hint of this in a speech in St. Louis yesterday.

After adding that President Roosevelt believes you can trust the nation "to play the game" Johnson added:

"But he is a realist and he has repeatedly said—publicly and privately—that he does not purpose to leave the vast majority of honest men to the mercy of the small percentage of those who would exploit the public spirit of their betters."

NEWSPAPER DELIVERY has come to be an accepted fact—much the same as the rising and the setting of the sun—but few home-served readers realize the training and effort that lies behind this service which costs them but a few cents a day.

The newspaper industry is dependent on boys—school boys—for the prompt and regular distribution of their papers. There are more than 588,000 boys in the United States who are engaged in this task—sturdy, red-blooded boys like those pictured here—who are equipped physically and mentally to perform their task under any condition. Properly dressed and properly trained, these boys are ready, like the pioneers of yesterday, to brave the elements, if need be, to serve others and to benefit themselves. Their task requires less than an hour and a half a day, but it is rigid in its requirements of regularity and punctuality. By working hand in hand with educational authorities, the newspaper industry is making better students of these boys while giving them additional training in the fundamentals of business and encouraging them in their ambition to be self-reliant and thrifty.

To coddle and indulge youth is to plant

seeds of decay in the moral fibre of the men of tomorrow. Indolence and dependence are not breeders of a sturdy race. Reformers, in a blind effort to correct some undesirable conditions of child labor which require full-time employment, are threatening to deprive the newspaper boy, a part-time worker, of a healthful, clean, instructive occupation that only he can profitably undertake. They propose to amend the Constitution of the United States to give Congress the power to limit, regulate and prohibit the labor of persons under eighteen years of age.

Proper training is the birthright of American youth. The newspaper industry affords a splendid training school for the business men of tomorrow—an occupation in which health, character and the ambitions of youth are developed to the fullest extent. The influence of their work may be seen in this remark by an active social worker: “... Your plan has succeeded in doing for these boys in a very short time more than we have been able to attain through legislation over a period of years.”

Preserve for the boy who delivers your daily paper the right to be engaged in a task that is developing in him those attributes of high character that are necessary to his future success.

Wait a While

NOW comes a plea that the federal government, as part of its recovery program, extended a helping hand to education.

It is made by Dean William F. Russell of Teachers' College, Columbia university.

Dean Russell, speaking before the Institute on the Administration of Public Education, advocated that part of the $3,000,000,000 in the public works fund be allotted to public schools, state universities and other phases of the program of general education. He urged that the government "make grants for this purpose at once in almost any form."

He held public education to be "of first rank and of first importance" among the public works on the program of direct federal subsidy.

Few will disagree with the dean on the importance of public education. There are other considerations, however, to be taken into account in connection with his proposal of direct federal aid to schools. Subsidization of education by the federal government would invite dangers that might prove more disastrous than the conditions it sought to cure. The states have surrendered many of their original functions to the federal government but public education is one to which they have wisely clung.

There is no question but that educational costs generally were far too high before the depression's pinch was begun to be felt. Like most institutions supported by public funds, the schools had been invaded by extravagance. Elimination of some of the unessentials, cutting of salaries and consolidations offered a way out. Readjustments along these lines are being made. If wisely done, they promise to benefit rather than to damage public education.

There, of course, is the possibility that there might develop an emergency of such force as to make necessary the extending of federal assistance. This point, however, has not been reached nor is it observable on the horizon. Unless and until such a crisis be reached, the matter should be left to the states to handle in their own way. The federal government has enough on its hands already to keep itself busy for quite a while at an eventual cost to the public which none now can estimate.

It Has "Teeth"

RUMORS of arbitrary action by the federal government in connection with enforcement of the national industrial recovery act already are beginning to appear in various places. They include the sudden closing of plants or threats to close them because of failure of the managing authorities to comply with the provisions of the act.

It is well for the public to have a correct understanding of this emergency industrial law which was enacted to remain in effect until June 1, 1934. The act has real teeth in it, both jail sentences and fines being included among the penalties which may be inflicted on its violators.

The blanket code recently has claimed chief attention in connection with the placing of the law in effect. This it should be remembered is temporary and voluntary. The act calls for the formulation of codes by the different industries. Because of the time required for this to be done, however, the president proposed the adoption of a blanket code which would remain effective until the individual codes had been approved. Formulation of the latter, meanwhile, is proceeding.

It is in connection with enforcement of the individual codes that the punitive provisions of the act apply. The carrying out of these does not rest on voluntary co-operation. After a trade association code has been submitted and approved by the government, members of the association become subject to the penalties provided in the industrial act for violation of codes affecting interstate or foreign commerce. An alleged violator may be hailed into federal court, and, if convicted, he is subjected to a fine of $500 for each offense, with each day that such violation continues being deemed a separate offense.

"STOLEN LOVE"

by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

COPYRIGHT BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

Joan Hastings, seventeen and beautiful, lives a secluded life with her two maiden aunts in a house long run to seed. Aunt Evvie, discovering that Joan has visited a dance hall, angrily reveals to her the story of how her mother had won her father away from Aunt Babe. Joan, alone in her room, clasps to her heart a miniature of her mother and refuses to believe she was anything but good. Aunt Evvie buys a cheap auto and engages Bill Martin, a garage worker, to care for it. Bill, looking up from his work, sees Joan watching him from her window. Ordered to water the rose garden, Joan sinks down on the running board of the car and weeps because of her loneliness and restraints. Bill finds her, and distressed by her grief, tries to comfort her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER 5

Bill hadn't the time for girls. He had been struck with Joan's beauty when he first saw her framed in the red velvet curtains that first afternoon. She haunted him, as a bar of music, or a line from a poem, she haunted him, and all the next day as he went about his greasy chores in Gerwin's Garage he thought of her, slender and gold and remote in the window. But she lived in "the Van Fleet mansion," and she was only a kid. He would never had thought of her as a possible sweetheart. Big Bill Martin was almost twenty, and had worked on the docks.

Nor would Joan have made the first advances. They might never have known each other, had he not come upon her that April afternoon crying in the old stable.

Were they really strangers? Joan looked up at him through wet, thick lashes. Her seagreen eyes were deep pools of wandering tenderness. "We—we're like the story of the sleeping princess in the fairy tales," she said in her clear, childish voice. "You know—she's been asleep for a hundred years, and he finds her, and kisses her—"

She broke off, and grinned in sudden embarrassment. "I mean because we didn't know each other before—and all of a sudden, we just did."

He hadn't meant to kiss her, not even when she talked about the fairy tale, but she was so near, her sweet mouth was so soft and red. Their lips met, then Joan drew back in sudden fright. "Oh—why did you—"

"Well, I guess I better get busy on the car," he said with forced cheerfulness. "That's what I was sent around here to do—be losing my job if I don't look out, and then, lower, anxiously, "You—you aren't angry—are you?"

She shook her head. "No—not angry."

He squeezed her slender hand in his brown paw. "Then it's all right. Say, can I use the hose on the car?" "To wash it with? Oh, yes, and I'll take it when you're finished."

They went out together, and Bill served it to the leaky faucet near the south hedge.

"I'll hold it for you!" "Oh no—"

"But I want to!" In the end he let her, and then he dragged it back to the rose garden for her, and returned to the car to finish his work.

From her place in the garden Joan could watch him. She saw him in a golden mist. Already she was fitting him into all her bookish dreams. She saw him musing with a dog team through the frozen north. A flash of red—the Royal Mounted, getting his man. A sweating khaki figure leading a charge into No Man's Land. An engineer in tropic white, beating his way through some South American jungle. Her heart beat crazily against her blue serge side.

How hard he worked on Evvie's car. His khaki shirt was open at the neck. She had never noticed that boys had pretty necks before. Well, not pretty exactly—but nice. How blue his eyes were. Dark hair and blue eyes—

"My father had dark hair and blue eyes!" she called to him across the bushes.

"Did he?" The color rose in the boy's freckled face. He stole another look at the girl in the sun. "Your hair is awfully pretty!" he said. It was his first compliment. He had never had a girl.

A warm blush climbed to the roots of her crinkly gold hair. "Do you think I'm pretty?" she asked, very low.

He nodded, embarrassed again. He had never had a girl, but he had never heard of a girl like this one. Like some sort of shy wild thing, bold one minute, and getting ready to run the next. And how lovely she was, all gold and ivory and slender. . . .

With a convulsive movement he stuffed the rags he had been polishing the car with, under the seat. "See you next week. Goodbye—"

And he fled. . . .

The rose garden was soaked. Joan was winding the hose when the aunts came home after the meeting of the Sewing Circle.

"I don't think I'll care for much dinner," Aunt Babe was saying.

He hadn't meant to kiss her, but she was so near, her sweet mouth was so soft and red.

"Mrs. Thomas always serves such rich refreshments."

"Did the boy clean the car?" Aunt Evvie demanded, making for the stable.

Joan went on winding the hose. Her eyes were stary. There was a radiance over her that did not come from the last slanting rays of the afternoon sun.

"Yes—he was here," she said.

"Well, it looks pretty good," Aunt Evvie came out, and bolted the heavy door. "New brooms sweep clean."

Something in the pose of Joan's lithe blue figure, something in the way the sunset glorified her burnished, wind-blown hair made Evvie catch her breath sharply. It was as if she were seeing Joan for the first time, seeing the ivory and rose of her youth, her round slenderness, her delicately perfect profile. "Veronica all over again!" she thought bitterly. "And grown up—grown up like a mushroom, overnight!"

When nine o'clock had come, and Joan had closed her books and gone to bed, Evvie turned to Babe, who was sewing on a white canton flannel nightgown destined for the Foreign Missions' Christmas box. "We'll have to do something with Joan," she said decisively.

"Aven't I always said—" "Oh yes, you said a lot, but there wasn't much point in it before. She's growing up so fast. I don't know as I want the responsibility. Do you suppose Cousin Belle would take her? A school like Belle's is what Joan needs, and she could help Belle in some ways."

"But think of the fare to Philadelphia, sister? Why it would cost—"

"Belle ought to pay it. She probably would. It would pay her in the end. I believe I'll write—"

Old Mrs. Heeley who always listened in on the evening confidences by way of the kitchen keyhole, straightened up, and rubbed her chilled ear tenderly.

"So that's it. Humph!" she addressed the kitchen alarm clock she was preparing to take upstairs with her. "Sending her away to school, eh? Well, I remember when they sent Veronica away. Old Mr. Van Fleet thought he was terrible smart. Like Miss Evvie. But he was too slow. Miss Evvie'd better look out she ain't too slow, that's all I got to say!"

And upstairs Joan leaned out of her window in the moonlight. There was a little ghost of a smile on her lips, but her eyes were heavy. Heavy with sleep, and yearning for Bill. Bill who had kissed her, and put his strong, brown arm protectively about her shoulders.

"Your hair is awfully pretty!" She said the precious words over in her heart. Bill had said that to her. He thought her hair was pretty. She covered her burning face with her hands.

On the road, the other side of the hedge, a boy passed, whistling. He had walked up from the hollow, just to pass by the house.

It was quite dark in the old Van Fleet place.

HEMOPHILIA IS EASY TO DETECT

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D. United States senator from New York Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

A SHORT TIME ago I received many requests for information about a disease known as "hemophilia." It was not until I attended a movie and saw the picture "Rasputin" that I understood why so many of these inquiries were appearing in my mail. The story of Rasputin is based on the fact that the czar's only son was a sufferer from hemophilia.

Among the letters was one from a young girl who said she was a "bleeder." This is the name given to an individual afflicted with hemophilia. Sufferers from this disease bleed upon the slightest provocation.

I am confident that this girl is not afflicted with this disease. I say this without hesitancy because hemophilia rarely occurs in females. It is a hereditary disease transmitted by the female, but found only in the male offspring.

A daughter may inherit the tendency but show no sign of the disease. She is not a bleeder, but if she marries and has a male child he is likely to be afflicted with hemophilia. He is a bleeder. Unfortunately, once the disease is implanted in a family it will continue being handed down until that family becomes extinct. The victim of this disease is susceptible to bleeding, even to severe hemorrhage. One attack may prove fatal.

The bleeding may begin with a simple blow or injury, such as a scratch, a fall or a push. The disease may be present for many years and accidentally be discovered by the bleeding after a slight abrasion, cut, extraction of a tooth, or the removal of tonsils. In these cases the bleeding is sudden, unexpected and severe.

Coagulation Test When the tendency is unsuspected and the subject has a minor operation such as the removal of tonsils and adenoids, the sufferer may bleed to death. Within recent years this danger has been minimized by the routine use of a special examination called the "bleeding and coagulation time test." This is used in suspected cases of hemophilia and on all children admitted to a hospital for operation.

The cause of hemophilia has never been discovered. Much research work has been conducted all over the world in an effort to solve this problem. Within recent years the disease has assumed less dangerous significance, because of its early recognition.

On the Run

WHAT THE STARSSAY

By R. FREDRIC KANE

Thursday and Friday are the best fishing days for this week. This week the planet of good fortune, Jupiter will transit over the Sun position of those born September 16-17-18. If this affects you be sure to grasp any opportunity which may come to you. Under such transit the opportunities are very likely to be good ones. But we can say that just the opposite applies to those born about September 2 or of any year. If this happens to be your birthday beware of any opportunity which you might encounter and especially on this Monday. It will only seem to be a good opportunity. It might be well, if you were born September 2 or 3 to guard your actions during the balance of the month of August.

Tuesday should be a good day for all those born in the signs Erles, Scorpio and Capricorn but not so good for those born in Taurus or Libra.

Wednesday should be a real good day for the Aquarians but not so good for those born in Sagittarius.

Thursday is the day when those born September 16-17 or 18 should keep their eyes open to good opportunities. Since this includes yours, truly, we intend to make the most of it.

Friday is likely to be a hectic day for the Aquarians and also for those born under Scorpio and Aries. If this hits you watch out for accidents and keep your temper under control.

Saturday is a day which will affect those born January 31 in a rather aggravating manner.

If you were born on any of the

MOVIES

AT THE GRAND

Her slender and sylph-like figure, costumed with a smile and a modicum of filmy, weaves in graceful motion to the rhythm of a Cuban orchestra. The soft lights of a gray and festive Havana casino add to the beauty of the scene.

Bette Davis has the title role with Gene Raymond playing opposite her.

AT THE CLIFTONA

Madame Racketeer returns to the screen in a new racket of giggle-water and laughing-gas in "A Lady's Profession." Paramount picture which opens Tuesday and Wednesday at the Cliftona Theatre with Allison Skipworth, Roland Young and Sari Maritza.

Brittle humor, infectious laughter wriggle through the story as Miss Skipworth in the role of a British lady, leaves the safety of her ancestral castle to solve the problem of an impoverished nobleman who persists in leaping from scrape to scrape. Roland Young is excellent as the nitwit Englishman Sari Maritza and Kent Taylor, the new Paramount find, play the romantic leads while the irresistible comics, Roscoe Karns and Warren Hymer, complete the laugh sextette.

EXTERMINATOR

MISSOULA, Mont.—Earl Yonkers, Corvallis, Mont., rancher, utilizes the old flivver in waging a war of extermination against gophers. Yonkers drives the old car up to one of the gopher holes, attaches a rubber hose to the exhaust pipe, inserts the other end of the hose in the hole and lets the motor run for a minute or two. Then he covers the hole with dirt. Yonkers declares no gopher can survive such an attack.

paid $6. Others fared equally well.

Yet the refiners submitted a code 44 pages long, the gist of which is that they will cooperate if the government bars all refined sugar from the U. S. A.

Beet sugar producers also arouse the private wrath of the New Dealers. The Great Western of Colorado, they claim, is trying to block any agreement on sugar quotas.

Their philosophy is summed up by Horace Havemeyer, heavy stockholder of Great Western, potent executive in South Porto Rico Sugar Remington Arms, Scranton and Lehigh Coal, Bankers Trust, and Brooklyn Elevator. He said:

"This Administration is going out in four years and I can afford to lose money for that long. Why should I cooperate?"

Muscling In

The Department of Justice has quietly gone on the trail of Muscle Shoals' real estate boomers. Reports have reached it of a high-pressure drive to unload lots near the Shoals at fancy prices to gullible buyers.

This is the third time the land-boom boys have started a Muscle Shoals lot-selling campaign. The first was in 1922, right after Henry Ford made his offer to buy the project from the government. Barren, undeveloped low-land lots bought by the promoters for a few hundred dollars were sold for as much as $6,000 apiece. In 1925-26 another boom was started.

One thing that the promoters are not telling prospective buyers is that the Cove Creek Dam that the government is preparing to build would be 180 miles from Muscle Shoals.

F. B. M. Santa Fe, N. Mex.—Washington is still a fairly good hunting ground for debutantes and other eligibles. Bachelors are not as wealthy as they were, and titles a little scarcer, but the going is much easier for girls from the Golden West . . . H. J. T. Harlem, N. Y. Slavery still exists in Liberia. Many negro groups in this country charge that big interest payments on the Firestone Rubber Company loan and high taxes to pay American advisers are indirectly responsible. To pay these, the Liberian Government charges a hut tax of $1 to natives living in the jungle. The charge is that the natives, lacking cash, sell their babies. In some cases this is undoubtedly true, but many of the American negroes who founded Liberia many years ago as a haven for their race, have been brutal in their treatment of their African brothers . . . Cuban Troubles Traced Back to Pres. Coolidge, Kellogg, S. Z. Mitchell

WASHINGTON — Discretion and loyalty are the cardinal virtues of all career diplomats, but over the third highball they will admit that the present chaos in Cuba to a very considerable extent dates back to three potent people. They are Calvin Coolidge, Frank B. Kellogg, and Sidney Z. Mitchell, head of Electric Bond and Share. The latter was materially responsible for elevating Machado to office. The first two were materially responsible for keeping him there.

It happened this way: Machado was hired by Electric Bond and Share to buy power companies all over Cuba. He was then only a member of Congress. He made money, was boosted by Mitchell, ran for the presidency. After election he pushed a bill through the Cuban Congress giving Electric Bond and Share favorable leases on the Havana electric light plant and street car system and remitting back taxes.

Then in 1928, Coolidge and Kellogg went to Havana. They were received as conquering heroes. Cuba was the only foreign country visited by Mr. Coolidge. It was considered a great tribute to Machado. The people of Cuba considered him invincible.

That visit insured Machado's re-election two years later.

Since the Coolidge trip Cubans were led until recently to believe that the United States would intervene to support their dictator if they revolted.

Inflation

The long-argued issue, to inflate or not to inflate, is once more wringing the brows of F. D. R.'s inner council of economic strategists.

Prior to the recent market break, the question had been relegated into the background. The President and his advisers were content to let things ride. Stock and commodity prices were zooming skyward. The world had a very rosy hue.

But the market flop and subsequent flattening out of price gains completely changed this picture. So inflationists again are raising their voices. "I told you so," Oklahoma's Senator Elmer Thomas, zealous leader of the band, has renewed his demand that the President put the three-point Inflation Act into operation.

As a result the Administration is taking an inventory of the situation. Under the Thomas Inflation measure, the President is empowered to expand Federal Reserve credit by $3,000,000,000 in late currency by an equal sum, and cut the gold content up to 50 per cent.

Merry-Go-Round

A private check by the Treasury submitted to F. D. R., shows that practically nothing has been done of an inflationary nature. The gold content of the dollar remains untouched; expansion of Federal Reserve credit in the form of open market purchases of government bonds amounts to a meager $199,000,000; and expansion of the currency comes to only $130,000,000. A confidential report disclosed that the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., has not issued a dollar of currency under the inflationary measure.

Obliging

Few business groups have come in for more vitriolic private denunciation by the higher-ups around Roosevelt than the sugar crowd. "I never knew people could be so intractable in their greed until I met the sugar refiners," one high agricultural official said.

The American Sugar Refinery made enough money during the depression to pay $5 and $6 dividends and re-tire several million dollars worth of bonds. Savannah Refinery made $5 a share and

F. D. R. SENDS WARSHIPS TO CUBAN SHORE

Two Men-of-War Now Located at Havana; to Defend Citizens Only

HERRERA ESCAPES

Assassins Fire Shots at New President

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—President Roosevelt intends to keep the three American warships in Cuban waters until there is reasonable assurance that there will be no outbreak of anarchy in the island Republic, it was said at the state department today.

It is hoped such assurance will be forthcoming in time for the vessels to withdraw late today, but if Ambassador Sumner Welles considers the situation still dangerous the ships will remain indefinitely.

HAVANA, Aug. 14.—Two American warships, dispatched by President Roosevelt to ensure the safety of American citizens in Cuba, arrived off Havana shortly before dawn today.

Just as the American men-of-war steamed into the harbor at dawn, one of the last traces of the deposed Machado regime disappeared with the precipitate flight of General Albert Herrera, Machado's minister of war and military dictator for a day.

Herrera fled with members of his family to escape the tidal wave of retribution meted out by liberated Cuba against pillars of the Machado regime, believed to have taken a toll of nearly 50 dead and property damage that ran into the millions.

Under specific orders from President Roosevelt to protect and not intervene, the destroyer Taylor anchored in the middle of Havana harbor while the Claxton took up a post off Morro Castle. A third warship was expected at Manzanillo from the Caribbean sea.

Both American and Cuban business men and authorities were hopeful that the presence of the warships off the coast would have a telling moral effect in restoring peace to this strife-torn island and put an end to the "war of revenge" launched by the populace against remaining symbols of Machado's despotism.

The victims for the most part have been leaders and members of Machado's dreaded secret strong-arm squad, the "porra," while the property sacked and looted has included the presidential palace, government offices and the homes of members of the deposed president's cabinet.

Despite the general jubilation at Carlos, Manuel de Cespedes' succession to the presidency, an attempt was made to assassinate him four hours after he took the oath of office.

An automobile filled with men believed to have been Machado supporters, striving to effect a last, desperate revenge for the reverse suffered by their chief, sped past the home of the new president, spraying it with machine gun bullets.

No one in the house was hit, but two soldiers were reported wounded by a volley of lead as the gunmen escaped.

2 Negro Youths To Die In Chair

Plea of Mistaken Identity Ignored by Governor in Refusing to Act

COLUMBUS, Aug. 14.—Two negro youths, convicted of the murder of Harry Friedhof, Silverton bank cashier, today lived their last hours of life.

Shortly after sun-down tonight, the two youths, James and Joseph Murphy, will be put to death in the electric chair at Ohio Penitentiary.

The fate of the negroes were sealed last Saturday when Governor George White refused to intervene, even though a white woman, Mrs. Mildred Bonnie of Cincinnati, appeared before the state parole board and declared the pair were victims of mistaken identity.

Mob Slays Two Negroes, Other Thot Dead Hunted; Confessed Girl's Death

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Aug. 14.—A special grand jury investigation into the lynching of two negro youths, charged with the assault and murder of 18-year-old Vaudine Maddox, was ordered today by Governor B. M. Miller as searchers combed the countryside for the body of a third negro, seized by an armed mob with his two slain companions.

Little hope was held that the third negro, Elmore Clark, 28, confessed slayer of the girl, had escaped the fury of the mob. Clark and his two companions, Dan Pippin, 18, and A. T. Dardin, 16, were seized by the heavily armed mob early Sunday as they were being spirited to jail in Birmingham for safe keeping.

Two automobiles loaded with the mobsters surrounded the sheriff's car just across the Jefferson-co line 20 miles from here and forcibly took the indicted negroes from the officers. Outnumbered, the deputies offered no resistance.

A few hours later, the bodies of Pippin and Dardin, each riddled with 25 pistol bullets, were found on a roadside near Woodstock, midway between Tuscaloosa and Birmingham and only a short distance from the point where they were seized.

HIT-SKIP CAR KILLS MILLER YOUTH SUNDAY

Lense Only Clue as William Miller, 29, is Killed at Grove City

REDMAN BADLY HURT

Funeral services will be held Wednesday at 2 p. m. at St. Philip's Episcopal church, Rev. L. C. Sherburne officiating, for William A. Miller, 29, of Columbus, son of William Miller, 118 1-2 E. Main-st., who was killed by a hit-skip automobile early Sunday.

The youth was walking on a side-walk near the north corporation of Grove City about 4 a. m. when the crash was heard in a restaurant from which he had walked only a few minutes before. The automobile which struck him was driven off the main highway and tore up a part of the curbing where it hit the youth.

His body was identified in the Doty & Stroup funeral home at Grove City four hours after his death by a friend, Miss Helen McCauley, Columbus.

The hit-skip car dragged young Miller's body 100 feet. His skull was fractured, he suffered internal injuries and both his legs were broken.

COUNTY 'DADS' DELAY NAMING COURTS' CLERK

Commissioners Await Report of Atwill Checking Out Pickets

HEAR NEW NAMES

J. O. Eagleson Newest Candidate for Post

Selection of a successor to Ferd M. Pickets, clerk of courts, will not be made by the county commissioners until the present clerk has been "checked out" by Allen Jack Atwill of the state auditor's office. Mr. Atwill will probably not complete his work until about Tuesday noon. He was called Monday morning by Mr. Pickets.

As a result, Mr. Pickets' resignation to the county commissioners to become effective Tuesday instead of Monday as at first intended. Pickets has resigned to become chief counsel for the Columbus branch of the federal Homeowners Loan corporation.

Several new names had been added today to the list of applicants for the appointment. J. O. Eagleson, S. Pickaway-st., former superintendent of city schools, is a candidate and it is reported O. Miller Beckett, Scioto-twp. Democrat, is seeking the appointment.

Harry W. Moore, former county treasurer, announced Monday that he is not a candidate for the office and so did Jack Roebuck, N. Court-st., whose name was mentioned Saturday.

The commissioners early this afternoon had not opened Mr. Pickets' formal resignation and neither had they opened any of the applications. A number of verbal applications had been received, it was said.

TASK IS DIFFICULT

The county dads face a real task, none will deny, before they have reached their decision. They must select entirely independent of the county Democratic organizations unless they ask for assistance in making their selection. All three, John W. Hay, Burr H. Rade, and Ralph E. May, were kept busy over the entire week by office-seekers.

The way the matter stands now the only thing certain is that the successor to Mr. Pickets is sure to be a Democrat.

The commissioners have not determined whether they will act Tuesday or wait until next Monday at their regular meeting. A

SCOTT FACING BOOZE CHARGE

Raid Nets Gallon of Alleged Whiskey; Hearing Before Judge Adkins

Rolland "Scotty" Scott, West-avenue and Water-st. was awaiting a hearing before Judge J. W. Adkins Monday for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, following a surprise raid on his home Saturday evening by members of the police and sheriff's departments.

He was to be arraigned sometime Monday afternoon. Scott was arrested at his home at Water-st. and Western-ave about 8 p. m. by Sheriff Charles Radcliff, Deputy Sheriff Bryan Custer, Officer Fred Fitzpatrick and Karl Radcliff. A gallon of alleged whiskey was found at his home.

He was arrested sometime ago on a similar charge and was fined $100 and costs.

Scott is the third liquor law offender to be arrested within the past two weeks. Frank Smith of Logan-st. is in the county jail serving out a fine of $100 and costs imposed by Judge J. W. Adkins, and Sherman Lowery of Clinton-st. was released last week after friends furnished bond and he made arrangements to pay his $100 fine in installments.

Despite the fact that the federal prohibition bureau passed out of existence last week, the local enforcement agencies continue to remain active.

FATHER CONFESSES BRUTAL MURDER OF YOUNG 'LOVE CHILD'

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 14.—Characterized by police as "the coldest-blooded murder in San Francisco in the last decade," the slaying of a month-old "love child," whose throat had been cut, was revealed today by the confession of a conscience-stricken 21-year-old youth, father of the child.

The youth and father, according to police, is Frank Fabian, San Francisco athlete and physical culture instructor.

PRES. ROOSEVELT MAY INTERVENE TO AVERT NEW LABOR UPRISING

Damaging to Touhy

William Hamm (left), kidnaped St. Paul brewer, with United States District Attorney Lew Drill, as he gave testimony that is expected to result in the extradition of Roger Touhy and the gang chiefs three companions who are now held in Milwaukee.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—President Roosevelt today faced the necessity of personal intervention as new and serious labor troubles threatened the drive of the National Recovery Administration to bring all industry under the Eagle by Sept. 1.

The president was expected to receive a survey of the situation during the day, ready being personally to bring the serious difficulties facing the industry, bringing the oil, steel and industries under the eagle.

Serious strike threatened in the western coal fields. Roosevelt first intervened to bring industrial peace. Several thousand miners had quit work as a result of disputes over keeping the peace pact.

President Roosevelt determined to go the limit to make the industry administration a success. He awaited further developments before deciding upon any action, pressure than that of public sentiment.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The 7,500,000 to 10,000,000 estimated, unofficially, to be listed under the Blue Eagle, National Recovery Administration officials today launched into a critical importance to the movement.

Modifications of blanket codes were being made as rapidly as possible. The administration was to be called two days later, and his staff could expect the mass of correspondence high on their desks.

While Johnson himself he was not seeking a position of his aides expressed ten million workers were fold. The goal, however, far off with the September approach.

Beginning with a half million people in the textile industry, the recovery administration had 750,000 bank employees, 2,000,000 in utilities, the mining and construction industries, and millions in more retail and miscellaneous industries.

PRESIDENT ON HAND

With President Roosevelt back in Washington to confer on the progress of the program, Johnson nevertheless faced difficult problems this week.

Representatives of the steel industry are scheduled to confer with him Tuesday, with the labor fight still unsettled; oil producers are to be called two days later, and final conferences were expected on lumber, publishing and other industries.

The coal hearings have ended with operators and miners far apart and Alabama operators threatening the first court fight against the NRA, a conference on coal was slated for Aug. 22.

The hearing on the proposed automobile code this week is expected to bring the recovery drive to a close.

OHIO LEGIONNAIRES TO MARCH; COMMANDER'S PLEA IS HEARD

LIMA, Aug. 14.—Ohio's veterans of the World War march again today.

Five thousand strong, the veterans will march amid the blare of martial tunes and cheering throngs as one of the highlights of the day.

The march will start at 4:30 p. m. Several elaborate floats also will be in the line of march.

The bid was tried off the legion convention yesterday by Louis A. Johnson, national commander, of Clarksburg, W. Va., who addressed the delegates with a plea of "economy in high places where it is worse needed, if there is to be economy in America at the expense of the veteran."

WHITE STUDIES NEW TAX PLAN

Legislative Leaders Summoned to Confer on Various Phases

COLUMBUS, Aug. 14.—Ohio's new battle over taxes will be opened tomorrow when legislative leaders, both Republicans and Democrats, will be summoned before Governor George White and presented with the five-point alternative program which the chief executive will lay before the general assembly when it convenes Wednesday afternoon in special session.

Demanding that money be raised immediately so Ohio's relief machinery may be kept operating, the governor will ask cooperation of the legislative leaders in enacting new taxes in a short session. Approximately $2,000,000 is needed for 1933.

Besides the five-point program proposing a sales tax, income tax, bond issue, utilities tax and new nuisance taxes, the governor is also expected to propose a new general beverage tax which would reduce the present 2-cents-a-bottle beer tax to one cent, and levy a general tax on all soft drinks.

Governor White will confer with legislative leaders tomorrow afternoon. His message to the legislature, to be delivered Wednesday afternoon will be broadcast by station WLW.

TRIO UNHURT WHEN CAR LEAVES ROAD

Leo White, W. Mill-st., deputy county auditor, and two companions, Henry Harding, N. Court-st., and Kenneth Goodman of Columbus, escaped injury Sunday afternoon when the Plymouth sport roadster driven by White left Route 11, about a mile south of Chillicothe.

White said the road was slippery from rain and he was unable to hold the car to the road after rounding a curve. The auto was damaged.

The trio was enroute to Jackson where Harding's orchestra played at a dance.

Cerydine Ludford, an employee of a local restaurant, filed the charge against Mrs. Smith.

“Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds”

NEWSPAPER DELIVERY has come to be an accepted fact—much the same as the rising and the setting of the sun—but few home-served readers realize the training and effort that lies behind this service which costs them but a few cents a day.

The newspaper industry is dependent on boys—school boys—for the prompt and regular distribution of their papers. There are more than 588,000 boys in the United States who are engaged in this task—sturdy, red-blooded boys like those pictured here—who are equipped physically and mentally to perform their task under any condition. Properly dressed and properly trained, these boys are ready, like the pioneers of yesterday, to brave the elements, if need be, to serve others and to benefit themselves. Their task requires less than an hour and a half a day, but it is rigid in its requirements of regularity and punctuality. By working hand in hand with educational authorities, the newspaper industry is making better students of these boys while giving them additional training in the fundamentals of business and encouraging them in their ambition to be self-reliant and thrifty.

To coddle and indulge youth is to plant

seeds of decay in the moral fibre of the men of tomorrow. Indolence and dependence are not breeders of a sturdy race. Reformers, in a blind effort to correct some undesirable conditions of child labor which require full-time employment, are threatening to deprive the newspaper boy, a part-time worker, of a healthful, clean, instructive occupation that only he can profitably undertake. They propose to amend the Constitution of the United States to give Congress the power to limit, regulate and prohibit the labor of persons under eighteen years of age.

Proper training is the birthright of American youth. The newspaper industry affords a splendid training school for the business men of tomorrow—an occupation in which health, character and the ambitions of youth are developed to the fullest extent. The influence of their work may be seen in this remark by an active social worker: “... Your plan has succeeded in doing for these boys in a very short time more than we have been able to attain through legislation over a period of years.”

Preserve for the boy who delivers your daily paper the right to be engaged in a task that is developing in him those attributes of high character that are necessary to his future success.

Wait a While
NOW comes a plea that the federal government, as part of its recovery program, extended helping hand to education. It is made by Dean William F. Russell of Teachers' College, Columbia University.
Dean Russell, speaking before the Institute on the Administration of Public Education, advocated that part of the $3,000,000,000 in the public works fund be allotted to public schools, state universities and other phases of the program of general education. He said that the government "make grants for this purpose at once in almost any form."
He held public education to be "of first rank and of first importance" among the public works on the program, of direct federal subsidy.
"Few will disagree with the dean on the importance of public education. There are other considerations, however, to be taken into account in connection with his proposal of direct federal aid to schools. Subsidization of education by the federal government would invite dangers that might prove more disastrous than the conditions it sought to cure. The states have surrendered many of their original functions to the federal government but public education is one to which they have wisely clung.
There is no question but that educational costs generally were too high before the depression's which was begun to be felt. Like most institutions supported by public funds, the schools had been invaded by extravagance. Elimination of some of the unessential, cutting of salaries and consolidations offered a way out. Readjustments along these lines are being made. If wisely done, they promise to benefit rather than to damage public education.
There, of course, is the possibility that there might develop an emergency of such force as to make necessary the extending of federal assistance. At this point, however, has not been reached nor is it observable on the horizon.
Unless and until such a crisis is reached, the matter should be left to the states to handle in their own way. The federal government has enough on its hands already to keep itself busy for quite a while at an eventual cost to the public which none now can estimate."

It Has "Teeth"
RUMORS of arbitrary action by the federal government in connection with enforcement of the national industrial recovery act already are beginning to appear in various places. They include the sudden closing of plants or threats to close them because of failure of the managing authorities to comply with the provisions of the act.
It is well for the public to have a correct understanding of this emergency industrial law which was enacted to remain in effect until June 1, 1934. The act has real teeth in it, both jail sentences and fines being included among the penalties which may be inflicted on violators.
The blanket code recently has claimed chief attention in connection with the placing of the law in effect. This, it should be remembered is temporary and voluntary. The act calls for the formulation of codes by the different industries. Because of the time required for this to be done, however, the president proposed the adoption of a blanket code which would remain effective until the individual codes had been approved by the formulation of the latter, meanwhile, is proceeding.
If in connection with enforcement of the individual codes that the punitive provisions of the act apply. The carrying out of these does not rest on voluntary cooperation. After a trade association code has been submitted and approved by the government, members of the association become subject to the penalties provided in the industrial act for violation of codes affecting interstate or foreign commerce. An alleged violator may be hauled into federal court, and, if convicted, he is subjected to a fine of $500 for each violation with each day that such violation continues being deemed a separate offense.
Another weapon is provided the government through the licensing provision of the act. Should any activities destructive to the emergency law's policy develop in any trade or industry, authority is given the president to require every person or concern engaged in that particular line to cease operating or obtain a license from the national recovery administration. The penalty for failure to do this is $500 for each day of continued violation here, likewise, being deemed a separate offense.
Whatever may be the individual or popular feeling toward the act as it now stands, it is the law. Compliance with it becomes the duty of all whom it may affect. The cooperation being given the government by industry in carrying it out is a pleasing development. It is not a voluntary movement, though, as individuals or corporations who may seek to violate it will find out.
A criminologist says burglars need hospital treatment. Why don't the police see that they get it?
In Portugal, we are told, children are fined instead of being whipped when they misbehave in school. What happens to them when they get home and the parents have to dig up an amount ranging from one cent to $12 we are not informed.

"STOLEN LOVE"

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

Joan Hastings, seventeen and beautiful, lives a secluded life with her two maiden aunts in a house long run to seed. Aunt Evvie, discovering that Joan has visited a dance hall, angrily reveals to her the story of how her mother had won her father away from Aunt Babe. Joan, alone in her room, clasps to her heart a miniature of her mother and refuses to believe she was anything but good. Aunt Evvie buys a cheap auto and engages Bill Martin, a garage worker, to care for it. Bill, looking up from his work, sees Joan watching him from her window. Ordered to water the rose garden, Joan sinks down on the running board of the car and weeps because of her loneliness and restraints. Bill finds her, and distressed by her grief, tries to comfort her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER 5

Bill hadn't the time for girls. He had been struck with Joan's beauty when he first saw her framed in the red velvet curtains that first afternoon. She haunted him, as a bar of music, from a poem can haunt one, and all the next day as he went about his greasy chores in Gerwin's Garage he thought of her, slender and gold and remote in the window. But she lived in "the Van Fleet mansion," and she was only a kid. He would never have thought of her as a possible sweetheart. Big Bill Martin was almost twenty, and had worked on the docks.

Nor would Joan have made the first advances. They might never have known each other had he not come upon her that April afternoon crying in the old stable.

Were they really strangers? Joan looked up at him through wet, thick lashes. Her seagreen eyes were deep pools of wondering tenderness. "We—we're like the story of the sleeping princess in the fairy tales," she said in her clear, childish voice. "You know—she's been asleep for a hundred years, and he finds her, and kisses her—"

She broke off and grinned in sudden embarrassment. "I mean because we didn't know each other before—and all of a sudden, we just did."

He hadn't meant to kiss her, not even when she talked about the fairy tale, but she was so near, her sweet mouth was so soft and red. Their lips met, then Joan drew back in sudden fright. "Oh—why did you?" she whispered.

"Well, I guess I better get busy on the car," he said with forced cheerfulness. "But when I was sent down here to do—be losing my job if I don't look out. And then, lower, anxiously, "You—you aren't angry—are you?"

She shook her head. "No—not angry—"

—squeezed her slender hand in his brown paw. "Then it's all right. Say, can I use the hose on the car?" "To wash it with? Oh, yes. And I'll take it when you're finished." They went out together, and Bill screwed it to the leaky faucet near the door. "I'll hold it for you!" "Oh—no—"

"But I want to!"

In the end he let her, and then he dragged it back to the rose garden for her, and returned to the car to finish his work.

From her place in the garden Joan could watch him. She saw him in a golden mist. Already she was fitting him into all her bookish dreams. She saw him musing with a dog team through the Rosen north. A flash of red—the Rosen Mounted, getting his man. A sweat-soaked khaki figure leading a charge into No Man's Land. An engineer in tropic white, beating his way through some South American jungle. Her heart beat crazily against his blue serge side.

How long he worked on Evvie's car. His khaki shirt was open at the neck. She had never noticed that boys had pretty necks before. Well, not pretty exactly—but nice. How blue his eyes were. Dark hair and blue eyes? she called to him across the bushes.

"Did he?" The color rose in the boy's freckled face. He stole another look at the girl in the sun. Your hair is awfully pretty!" he said. It was his first compliment. He had never had a girl.

A warm blush climbed to the roots of her crinkly gold hair. "Do you think I'm pretty?" she asked, very low.

He nodded, embarrassed again. He had never had a girl, but he had never heard of a girl like this one! Like some sort of shy wild thing, held one minute and getting ready to run the next. And how lovely she was, all gold and ivory and slender. . . .

With a convulsive movement he stuffed the rags he had been polishing the car with, under the seat. "See you next week. Goodbye—"

And he fled.

The rose garden was soaked. Joan was winding the hose when the aunts came home after the meeting of the Sewing Circle.

"I don't think I'll care for much dinner," Aunt Babe was saying.

"So that's it. Humph!" she addressed the kitchen alarm clock as he was preparing to take upstairs with her. "Sending her away to school, eh? Well, I remember when they sent Veronica away. Old Mr. Van Fleet thought he was terrible smart. Like Miss Evvie. But he was too slow. Miss Evvie'd better look out she ain't too slow, that's all I got to say!"

And upstairs Joan leaned out of her window in the moonlight. There was a little ghost of a smile on her lips, but her eyes were heavy. Heavy with sleep, and yearning for Bill. Bill who had kissed her, and put his strong, brown arm protectingly about her shoulders.

"Your hair is awfully pretty!" She said the precious words over in her heart. Bill had said that to her. He thought her hair was pretty. She covered her burning face with her hands.

On the road, the other side of the hedge, a light passed, whistling. He had walked up from the hollow, just to pass by the house.

It was quite dark in the old Van Fleet place.

He hadn't meant to kiss her, but she was so near, her sweet mouth was so soft and red.

"Mrs. Thomas always serves such rich refreshments."

"Did the boy clean the car?" Aunt Evvie demanded, making for the stable.

Joan went on winding the hose. Her eyes were starry. There was a radiance over her that did not come from the last slanting rays of the afternoon sun.

"Yes—he was here," she said. "Well, it looks pretty good." Aunt Evvie came out, and bolted the heavy door. "New brooms sweep clean."

Something in the pose of Joan's little blue eyes, something in the way the sunset glorified her burnished, wind-blown hair made Evvie catch her breath sharply. It was as if she were seeing Joan for the first time, seeing the ivory and rose of her youth, her round slenderness, her delicately perfect profile.

"Veronica all over again!" she thought bitterly. "And grown up—grown up like a mushroom, overnight!"

When nine o'clock had come, and Joan had closed her books and gone to bed, Evvie turned to Babe, who was sewing on a white cotton flannel nightgown destined for the Foreign Missions' Christmas box.

"We'll have to do something with Joan," she said decisively.

"Haven't I always said—" "Oh, yes, you said a lot, but there wasn't much point in it, before. She's growing up so fast. I don't know as I want the responsibility. Do you suppose Cousin Belle would take her? A school like Belle's would be just what Joan needs, and she could help Belle in some ways."

"But think of the fare to Philadelphia, sister? Why it would cost—"

"Belle ought to pay it. She probably would. It would pay her in a while. I believe I'll write—"

Old Mrs. Heady too always listened in the evening confidences by way of the kitchen keyhole, straightened up, and rubbed her chilled ear tenderly.

"Guess she's in bed by now!" The whistling grew fainter, blew away on the salt wind.

Aunt Evvie's letter went rushing on its way, and Spring who knows no letters, went leisurely about hers.

Tender, green leaves, pale and new, made a delicate lace canopy through which you could look up and see the azure sky and the big white clouds drifting over the old orchard. The hills teemed with wild flowers. The green waters of the foam, specked with white foam, sparkled in the sun and the little boats anchored there bobbed joyously up and down.

It was all new to Joan—all the old familiar sights and sounds and smells of Sausalito in Spring—because she was sharing it with Bill. And when the big yellow moon rode low in the sky, and the lanterns on the little boats over Belvedere way glowed like fireflies in the night, the beauty was almost more than she could bear. If only she could put her hand and touch him—know that he was loving it all, too—There must be a way—they must find a way to meet at nights, too.

At first it was enough to meet on Wednesday afternoons, when the two old ladies had gone primly into town, and he came to wash Aunt Evvie's car. Enough to stand near, and talk—about anything. To smile at each other wordlessly, and find funny little excuses to touch each other's hand or hair.

"Oh—you've blackened your finger nail. Doesn't it hurt? Just that—and all the while she was yearning to hold it against her heart—his poor hand."

"Hold on—there's a piece of cypress tangled in your hair. Wait—let me get it out!" His fingers were so big and rough in her soft tawny curls. He was disgusted with them for being so clumsy.

HEMOPHILIA IS EASY TO DETECT

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health,
New York City

A SHORT TIME ago I received many requests for information about a disease known as "hemophilia." It was not until I attended a movie and saw the picture "Rasputin" that I understood why so many of these inquiries were appearing in my mail. The story of Rasputin is based on the fact that the czar's only son was a sufferer from hemophilia.

Among the letters was one from a young girl who said she was a "bleeder." This is the name given to an individual afflicted with hemophilia. Sufferers from this disease bleed upon the slightest provocation.

Dr. Copeland

A Hereditary Disease
I am confident that this girl is not afflicted with this disease. I say this without hesitancy because hemophilia rarely occurs in females. It is a hereditary disease transmitted by the female, but found only in the male offspring.

A daughter may inherit the tendency but show no sign of the disease. She is not a bleeder, but if she marries and has a male child he is likely to be afflicted with hemophilia. He is a bleeder. Unfortunately, once the disease is implanted in a family it will continue being handed down until that family becomes extinct. The victim of this disease is susceptible to bleeding, even to severe hemorrhage. One attack may prove fatal.

The bleeding may begin with a simple blow or injury, such as a scratch, a fall or a push. The disease may be present for many years and accidentally be discovered by the bleeding after a slight abrasion, cut, extraction of a tooth, or the removal of tonsils. In these cases the bleeding is sudden, unexpected and severe.

Coagulation Test

When the tendency is unsuspected and the subject has a minor operation such as the removal of tonsils and adenoids, the sufferer may bleed to death. Within recent years this danger has been minimized by the routine use of a special examination called the "bleeding and coagulation time test." This is used in suspected cases of hemophilia and on all children admitted to a hospital for operation.

The cause of hemophilia has never been discovered. Much research work has been conducted all over the world in an effort to solve this problem. Within recent years the disease has assumed less dangerous significance, because of its early recognition.

Thursday and Friday are the best fishing days for this week. This week the planet of good fortune, Jupiter will transit over the Sun position of those born September 16-17-18. If this affects you be sure to grasp any opportunity which may come to you. Under such transit the opportunities are very likely to be good ones. But we can say that just the opposite applies to those born about September 2 of any year. If this happens to be your birthday beware of any opportunity which you might encounter and especially on this Monday. It will only seem to be a good opportunity. It might be well, if you were born September 2 or 3 to guard your actions during the balance of the month of August.

Tuesday should be a good day for all those born in the signs of Eries, Scorpio and Capricorn but not so good for those born in Taurus or Libra.

Wednesday should be a real good day for the Aquarians but not so good for those born in Sagittarius.

Thursday is the day when those born September 16-17 or 18 should keep their eyes open to good opportunities. Since this includes you, truly, we intend to make the most of it.

Friday is likely to be a hectic day for the Aquarians and also for those born under Scorpio and Aries. If this hits you watch out for accidents and keep your temper under control.

Saturday is a day which will affect those born January 31 in a rather aggravating manner. If you were born on any of the

MOVIES

AT THE GRAND

One of the highlights in "Ex-Lady," a Warner Bros. picture replete with startling situations, now showing at the Grand! The story is a genuine and highly exotic Rumba dance, performed by a Spanish dancer, Yvonne. Her slender and sylph-like figure, costumed with a smile and a modicum of racy, weaves in graceful motion to the rhythm of a Cuban orchestra. The soft lights of a gray and festive Havana casino add to the beauty of the scene.

Bette Davis has the title role with Gene Raymond playing opposite her.

AT THE CLIFTONA

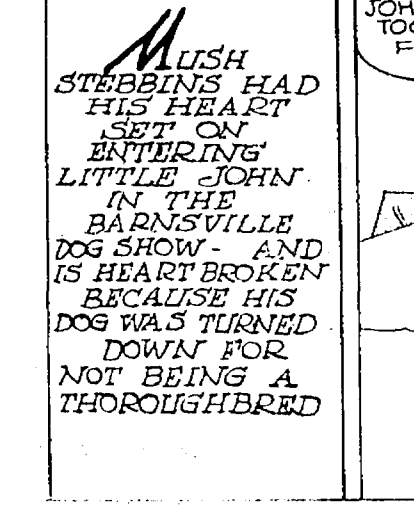

Madame Racketeer returns to the screen in a new racket of giggle-water and laughing-gas in "A Lady's Profession." Paramount picture, which opens Tuesday and Wednesday at the Cliftona Theatre with Allison Skipworth, Roland Young and Sari Maritza.

Brittle humor, infectious laughter wrinkle through the story as Sari Maritza, in the role of a British lady, leaves the safety of her ancestral castle to solve the problems of an impoverished nobleman who persists in leaping from scrape to scrape. Roland Young is excellent as the nit-wit Englishman Sari Maritza and Kent Taylor, the new Paramount find, play the romantic leads while the irrepressible comics, Roscoe Karns and Warren Hyler, complete the laugh sextette.

Yet the refiners submitted a code 44 pages long, the gist of which is that they will cooperate if the government bars all refined sugar from the U. S. A.

Beet sugar producers also arouse the private wrath of the New Dealers. The Great Western of Colorado, they claim, is trying to block any agreement on sugar quotas.

Their philosophy is summed up by Horace Havenover, heavy stockholder of Great Western, potent executive in South Porto Rico Sugar Remington Arms, Scranton and Lehigh Coal, Bankers Trust, and Brooklyn Elevator. He said:

"This Administration is going out in four years and I can afford to lose money for that long. Why should I cooperate?"

Muscling In

The Department of Justice has quietly gone on the trail of Muscle Shoals real estate boomers. Reports have reached it of a high-pressure drive to unload lots near the Shoals at fancy prices to gullible buyers.

This is the third time the land-boom boys have started a Muscle Shoals lot-selling campaign. The first was in 1922, right after Henry Ford made his offer to buy the project from the government. Barren, undeveloped low-land lots bought by the promoters for a few hundred dollars were sold for as much as $6,000 apiece. In 1925-26 another boom was started. One thing that the promoters are not telling prospective buyers is that the Cove Creek Dam that the government is preparing to build would be 180 miles from Muscle Shoals.

much easier for girls from the Golden West. . . . H. J. T. Harlem, N. Y., Slavery still exists in Liberia. Many negro groups in this country charge that big interest payments on the Firestone Rubber Company loan and high taxes to pay American advisers are indirectly responsible. To pay these, the Liberian Government charges a hut tax of $1 to natives living in the jungle. The charge is that the natives lacking cash, sell their babies. In some cases this is undoubtedly true, but many of the American negroes who founded Liberia many years ago as a haven for their race, have been brutal in their treatment of their African brothers. . . .
